Torch Song Tango Choir Julie Sophia Paegle, 2010 These fine poems are connected by and evoke the music of lost homelands Paegle the daughter of immigrants from Argentina and Latvia takes us through the tumult of displacement and migration with a strong sense for the folk songs and tango music of her youth Against this musical backdrop she invests the bandoneon an accordion like instrument brought to Argentina in the late nineteenth century with a special significance Her poetic account of the instrument yields this striking tribute which testifies to the passion of the collection when mission music spilled five octaves went new world wild The poems in the first section torch songs hover near a heartbreaking lyricism as they reckon with political histories landscapes and loss As she writes in this section there is truly nothing in this life like being blind in Granada The sonnet crown that comprises the next section tango liso plots a history of cultural inheritance and renewal weaving back and forth in time and spanning Argentina Spain and the United States Here the reader encounters Eva Per n alongside Katharine of Aragon and Billie Holiday The final section choir commemorates sites of pilgrimage in Latvia West Germany and Spain among other places In this extended contemplation of cathedral spaces Paegle interrogates the boundary between the sacred and the secular silence and song What emerges from this diverse collection is a sensual and allusive space where music and memory coincide
