Site Characterization And Exploration:

Site Characterization & Exploration C. H. Dowding, 1979      Geotechnical Site Characterization Anirban De, 2016-03-02 The topic of site characterization is unique to geotechnical engineering and owes its significance directly to the variability of the natural geologic deposits on the earth's surface which supports the foundation for any civil engineering project. Thus soil found below the ground at any construction site is different from soil located at another site even a neighboring one. Geotechnical Site Characterization will explore the methods utilized to evaluate the properties of natural subsurface deposits over which foundations of any structure is supported. Because of the wide variations in engineering properties of natural deposits proper site characterization requires an understanding of geology as well as various field and laboratory investigation methods. To be effective the scope of a site characterization program must be customized based on the needs for a specific project. The book will describe various types of current field and laboratory methods in detail and discuss their sustainability under various site conditions. There will be a thorough presentation and interpretation of test results to derive design parameters. Recent developments regarding specialized site characterization techniques such as geophysical methods and techniques suitable for specific purpose such as seismic hazard evaluation will also be included. The author will include recent case studies where site characterization played a key role. Three disparate cases will be discussed to provide as broad a coverage as possible covering between them soft natural soil under static loading coarse and fine grained soil under seismic impact and hazardous waste deposits under both static and seismic loading.      Nuclear waste disposal United States. Mayne, 2004 Soils and rocks are complex natural geomaterials that exhibit a wide range in strength stiffness state of stress structure and flow characteristics. Geotechnical Geophysical Site Characterization provides eleven keynote state of the art papers including the Mitchell Lecture. A total selection of 219 technical papers and theme reports address methods of site exploration related to ground exploration for civil engineering and construction works. These two volumes represent a collection of experience knowledge regarding various methods of in situ testing geophysical techniques innovative devices improved interpretation algorithms and statistical treatment of field data for the characterization of soils rocks and other geomaterials. The papers represent the written records and documented efforts from international experts from industry academe and government who participated in the Second International Conference on Site Characterization held in Porto Portugal on September 20 22 2004.
