Abstract

Foreign Policy decision-making is agreed to be one of the greatest instrument at a state's disposal to pursue its national interests. It is considered as a full political activity of states. A good Foreign Policy would obviously lead a state in fulfilling its national interests and acquiring rightful place among comity of nations. As such the study of Foreign Policy forms an important part of International Studies. However, the first problem that one faces in the study of Foreign Policy is the problem of definition or clear meaning of the term. When used, it is either out of context or entails a different meaning. As such, it becomes a "neglected concept" as most people dealing with the subject have felt confident that they knew what foreign policy was. This neglect has been one of the most serious obstacles to providing more adequate and comprehensive explanations of Foreign Policy. This article, seeks to provide a comprehensive meaning about the concept of Foreign Policy, and also look into some of the things that determines the foreign policy decision-making of a country. This work, will give many students, researchers and policy makers a good idea of what foreign policy entails and how such policy decisions are being made.

What is Foreign Policy?

After the treaty of Westphalia and the end of the First and Second World War, the international system has witnessed an increasing growth in the development of nation states. The end product of this development is thus, the creation of an interaction between these nation states. In addition, the establishment of United Nations and the process of decolonization that has liberated many states into sovereign entities have further provided the impetus to interrelationships among states. Such has resulted into the formation of 'foreign policies'. With the aim of determining and identifying the decisions, strategies, and ends of interaction of a state with another [1]. Furthermore, the modern world of "globalization"; the "widening, deepening and speeding up of global interconnectedness" <sup>2</sup>has increased this interrelationships or interactions among states. Hence, there is unanimity among scholars on the necessity of a "foreign policy" for each state, since no state will like to function in complete isolation. This made scholars like Felix Gross, to say that even a decision to have no relations with a particular state is also a foreign policy<sup>3</sup>. A state without a foreign policy, has been compared to a ship in the deep sea without any knowledge of directions<sup>4</sup>. Thus, foreign policy leads a state in fulfilling its national interests and acquiring rightful place among comity of nations.

Like small states studies, the first problem that one faces in the study of foreign policy, is the problem of definition or clear meaning of the term [2]. When used, it is either out of context or entails a different meaning. Such has led to scholars like Charles Hermann, to call foreign policy a "neglected concept"<sup>5</sup>. Adding that "this neglect has been one of the most serious obstacles to providing more adequate and comprehensive explanations of foreign policy." He believed that part of the reasons for this neglect is that "most people dealing with the subject have felt confident that they knew what foreign policy was."

The term foreign policy has been defined in various ways by scholars; however, they are certain that it is concerned with behaviour of a state towards other states. Hermann for instance, defined foreign policy as "the discrete purposeful action that results from the political level decision of an individual or group of individuals [3]. It is the observable artifact of a political level decision. It is not the decision, but a product of the decision." By this, it can be seen that Hermann defines foreign policy as the behaviour of states.

George Modjeski, defines it as "the system of activities evolved by communities for changing the behaviour of other states and for adjusting their own activities to the international environment. Foreign policy must throw light on the ways states attempt to change, and succeed in changing the behaviour of other states." Modjeski, noted only those aspects of policy that aim at the change in the existing behaviour of states, as the primary objectives of foreign policy. However, foreign policy is not only to change, but also continuation of the behaviour at different times [4]. It is concern both with the change and the status quo as far as they serve the national interest<sup>5</sup>. For example, Gambia's decision to cut diplomatic ties with Taiwan (a country it maintained ties with for almost two decades) in 2013, was a change in the foreign policy of the Gambia. In addition, no reasons were given for the decision, nor further details provided in the official
