

Comic-Book Heroes Meet The Beatles, Silver-Age Style

By Craig Shutt

The year 1964 stands out as a special one during the heady days of that decade. It may not have been the year that we were introduced to The Avengers or The X-Men, but it was the year that most of us were introduced to another phenomenon: Beatlemania.

Nothing in popular culture has ever compared to Beatlemania. Try to imagine a rock act bigger than Michael Jackson on his Thriller tour with more media hype than for Batman The Movie. If you can.

After The Beatles — John, Paul, George, and Ringo — appeared on The Ed Sullivan Show in February 1964, U.S. teen-agers became obsessed with the group. In March, five of their songs ranked one after another at the top of Billboard's top 100 listing. Later, they registered 12 hits in the top 100 at one time; not too shabby.

The centerpiece of Beatle paraphernalia was the Beatle wig. You needed one to look like a Beatle, of course, because hairstyles were somewhat shorter then — if you can even call what people were wearing back then a hair "style." Today it's hard to believe those early Beatles coiffures were considered way out.

No question about it, The Fab Four's impact was greater than any other group, including the Stones, The Animals, The Who, and even Freddie and the Dreamers. If you don't believe me, just look at comics.

You knew we'd get to them sooner or later, didn't you?

Yes, as just one measure of The Beatles' impact, look at all the Silver Age comics The Fab Four appeared in.

Comic-book editors in those days probably were not major Beatle fans, to put it charitably. But they knew what their readers wanted. And their readers wanted The Beatles!

The mop tops could show up anywhere — love comics, teen-age humor comics, even super-hero comics. Yes, that's right, even in our very own pulse-pounding, senses-shattering super-hero comics!

Do you remember those ginchy days when The Fab Four had the entire comics world buzzing — including our boys and girls in the Spandex suits? I hope so, because you're about to take a pop quiz on those meetings.

Come with me now to Earth-Silver, where Go-Go Checks and Pop-Art Productions are considered the height of sophistication. Makes me giddy just thinking about it.

While I calm down, see if you can answer this handful of questions about The Fab Four, culled strictly from their appearances and mentions in Marvel and DC comics:

Great Krypton is right! What terrible curse could have turned Superman's Pal into The Red-Headed Beatle in Jimmy Olsen #797? Um, well, he did it to himself, actually. Why?
