Springtime In Autumn:

Folk-taxonomies in Early English Earl R. Anderson, 2003 A folk taxonomy is a semantic field that represents the particular way in which a language imposes structure and order upon the myriad impressions of human experience and perception Thus for example the experience of color in modern English is structured around an inventory of twelve basic color terms but languages vary in the number of basic color terms used from thirteen or fourteen terms to as few as two or three Anthropological linguists have been interested in the comparative study of folk taxonomies across contemporary languages and in their studies they have sometimes proposed evolutionary models for the development and elaboration of these taxonomies The evolutionary models have implications for historical linguistics but there have been very few studies of the historical development of a folk taxonomy within a language or within a language family Folk Taxonomies in Early English undertakes this task for English and to some extent for the Germanic and Indo European language families The semantic fields studied are basic color terms seasons of the year geometric shapes the five senses the folk psychology of mind and soul and basic plant and animal life forms Anderson's emphasis is on folk taxonomies in Old and Middle English and also on the implications of semantic analysis for our reading of early English literary texts Buds of Springtime Glenn Ward Dresbach, 1905 Bahá'í maigzín, 1924 The Gardener's Magazine, 1903 Echoes from the French Poets, 1870 The Gospel of the Autumn Leaf William Eleazar Barton, 1900 Feeding Medieval England Helena Hamerow, Amy Bogaard, Michael Charles, Emily Forster, Matilda Holmes, Mark McKerracher, Christopher Bronk Ramsey, Elizabeth Stroud, Richard Thomas, 2025-11-21 This is an open access title available under the terms of a CC BY NC ND 4.0 International license It is free to read at on Oxford Academic and offered as a free PDF download from OUP and selected open access locations The population of England grew steeply in the Middle Ages especially between the tenth and thirteenth centuries This volume investigates how medieval farmers managed to produce the large harvests needed to sustain this growth growth that in turn fuelled a major expansion of towns and markets New evidence is presented for the development of the medieval farming regimes that shaped the English landscape in ways still visible today Medieval farming is a contentious topic not least because of the different approaches taken by historians archaeologists and geographers and no consensus has been reached about the cultivation regimes that underpinned medieval cereal production This volume presents a new perspective on this question based on the results of a project that analysed the remains of medieval crops arable weeds livestock and pollen from hundreds of excavations The new evidence that this generated reveals the conditions in which medieval crops were grown and how land use changed between the late Roman period and the Black Death The authors relate the results to archaeological and written evidence for farms and farming bringing an ecological perspective to the debate about the so called medieval agricultural revolution The cerealisation of England emerges as a regionally varied process lasting several centuries whose overall impact was nevertheless revolutionary The Bahá'í Magazine, 1924
