Workplace Perspectives on Education and Training P.B. Doeringer, 2012-12-06 Peter B Doeringer Many of our approaches to education and training date back to the nine tenth and early twentieth centuries Since that time the skills and abilities demanded by the economy have undergone far greater change than have our training arrangements Moreover our ambitions for what can be accomplished through education and training policy have also increased Not only do we expect that such policies should meet the skill needs of the nation but also we ask that they play a role in equalizing economic opportunity and in promoting greater well being among workers In accordance with its mandate to increase understanding of educational processes and educational policy the National Institute of Education NIB sponsored a two day workshop in June of 1979 to examine workplace perspectives on education and training policy The workshop brought together a group of employer and trade union representatives education and training specialists policy analysts and government officials to discuss research and policy questions raised by training activities at the workplace As one might expect the discussion ranged widely and reflected many viewpoints on the relationship between education and work Among the participants there was consensus neither as to what should be done nor 2 PETER B DOER INGER even as to what were the most important gaps in our knowledge about the workings of the education and training system The discussion was helpful however in drawing attention to the workplace as a significant and too often neglected component of this system
