Abstract—Taking common wealth as the research perspective, the entropy method is used to measure the level of urban-rural integration development in the Yangtze River Delta region from 2014 to 2021, and the Gini coefficient are used to analyze the level characteristics of urban-rural integration development in the Yangtze River Delta region, as well as combining with the two-way fixed model to explore the upgrading effect of the organic combination of the market and the government on urban-rural integration. The main conclusions are: (1) The overall level of urban-rural integration and development shows a spiral upward trend, with Jiangsu and Zhejiang provinces far ahead. (2) Regional differences in urban-rural integration development are obvious, but the overall trend is fluctuating downward. (3) The organic combination of market and government can have a significant enhancement effect on urban-rural integrated development. In terms of sub-dimensions, the significant positive effect of the organic combination of market and government on shared integration is dominated by economic development, spatial openness, green ecology, and scientific and technological innovation, while shared integration does not show a significant enhancement effect.

Keywords—Urban-rural integrated development; market; government; Yangtze River Delta region.

I. INTRODUCTION

Integrated urban-rural development is an important hand in realizing high-quality social development and a key breakthrough in cracking the imbalance and inadequacy of development between urban and rural areas. However, because economic development has long been constrained by the traditional urban-rural dichotomy, problems such as the wide gap between the incomes and consumption of urban and rural residents, difficulties in the free movement of factors, and imbalances in the allocation of infrastructure and public service facilities remain prominent. Therefore, breaking down urban-rural barriers and resolving imbalances and inadequacies in regional development is the key to easing urban-rural conflicts, narrowing the urban-rural gap, and realizing coordinated urban-rural development, as well as a necessary requirement for advancing the common good.

The combination of the market as the invisible hand and the government as the visible hand can effectively solve the current problems of insufficient and unbalanced development of urban and rural areas. In April, the CPC Central Committee and State Council's "Opinions on Accelerating the Construction of a National Unified Big Market" re-emphasized the importance of building the market and the government. The organic combination of market and government can allocate public resources more rationally, penetrate resources into rural areas, share public services, narrow the gap between urban and rural areas, and realize integrated urban and rural development. The Yangtze River Delta region is located in the eastern part of China, at the lower reaches of the Yangtze River, and the level of integrated urban-rural development is at the forefront of the country, one of the regions with the strongest comprehensive strength in China. As a model leading region, what is the level of integrated urban-rural development in the region? Has it achieved coordinated regional development? What are the roles of the market and the government in urban-rural integrated development? Clarifying the meaning of integrated urban-rural development is of great significance to the realization of integrated development in the Yangtze River Delta and the promotion of integrated urban-rural development in other regions.

This paper selects 40 prefecture-level cities in the Yangtze River Delta from 2014 to 2021 as the research sample. The data were mainly obtained from provincial and municipal statistical yearbooks, the website of the Ministry of Rural Agriculture and various types of public information.

II. THEORETICAL ANALYSIS OF INTEGRATED URBAN-RURAL DEVELOPMENT

(i) Construction of an evaluation indicator system

Urban-rural integration is the process of shifting the economic structure of urban and rural areas from dualism to monism^[1], emphasizing the free flow of production factors, such as population, capital, energy, and information technology, between urban and rural areas^[2], and is a dynamic and balanced development that establishes a unified market, facilitates the flow of factors, as well as optimizes the allocation of resources^[3]. Promoting the common prosperity of all people is the rightful meaning and important goal of building a modern socialist country as China rides on the momentum to start a new journey. To realize common prosperity, not only do we need to do a good job of "cake", but also "share the cake". General Secretary Xi Jinping also pointed out that "the most arduous and burdensome task in promoting common prosperity still lies in the countryside", which profoundly reveals that the imbalance between urban and rural development is the primary problem facing China in promoting the realization of common prosperity. In order to solve the
