Verbal Conditioning and Behaviour Jagannath Prasad Das, 1969 Posture and the Conditioning of Verbal Behavior Gerald Anthony Walker, 1976 A second study was conducted with 53 Introductory Psychology student interviewees who were paid volunteers The students were randomly assigned to either the attending or non attending condition The attending and non attending behaviors were consistent with those used in the first experiment The awareness questions were similar to those used by Taffel 1955 except for an item to monitor anxiety of the students and a second to monitor the student s feelings about the interviewer In an individual manner the students in both groups were verbally and visually presented an 80 item task similar to that used by Taffel 1955 The hypothesis that nonverbal attending cues potentiate the verbal reinforcer good in the verbal conditioning of Taffel items was not upheld in the present experiment The two experiments in this study suggest that certain attending behaviors do not significantly effect the power of verbal reinforcers to condition verbal behavior
