Women And Learning In English Writing:

Women and Learning in English Writing, 1600-1900 Deirdre Raftery,1997 This book documents and analyzes an aspect of social change in England the opening of higher education to women Because college education for women developed in the second half of the nineteenth century the opening of higher education to women has been viewed as an unexpected revolution This book challenges such all assumption by indicating that the education of women had been the subject of debate and serious discussion at least since the Renaissance and it illustrates how print culture brought the debate into the public domain and contributed to the eventual opening of higher education to women The publications examined in this study indicate that formal higher education for women had been anticipated by a significant number of seventeenth eighteenth and early nineteenth century writers whose works are here contextualised for the first time While the focus of this study has been on printed sources attention has also been paid to the personal papers of individuals who directly influenced the eventual opening of university education to women and who illustrated that the success of the struggle for women s education was due to the ability of a few individuals to realise ambitions which had been held for generations

Women Writing the Academy Gesa Kirsch,1993-10-28 Women Writing the Academy is based on an extensive interview study by Gesa E Kirsch that investigates how women in different academic disciplines perceive and describe their experiences as writers in the university Kirsch s study focuses on the writing strategies of successful women writers their ways of establishing authority and the kinds of audiences they address in different disciplinary settings Based on multiple interviews with thirty five women from five different disciplines anthropology education history nursing and psychology and four academic ranks seniors graduate students and faculty before and after tenure this is the first book to systematically explore the academic context in which women write and publish While there are many studies in literary criticism on women as writers of fiction there has not been parallel scholarship on women as writers of professional discourse be it inside or outside the academy Through her research for example Kirsch found that women were less likely than their male counterparts to think of their work as sufficiently significant to write up and submit for publication tended to hold on to their work longer than men before sending it out and were less likely than men to revise and resubmit manuscripts that had been initially rejected This book is significant in that it investigates a new area of research gender and writing and in doing so brings together findings on audience authority and gender

English Composition for College Women Elizabeth Moore, Dora Gilbert Tompkins, Mildred MacLean, 1916 Female Education in Ireland 1700-1900 Deirdre Raftery, Susan M. Parkes, 2007 The history of formal education for Irish women was characterised by a dichotomy should a girl be educated for the private sphere and a dutiful subservience or should she be educated for independent thought and paid employment Her role models were either women who like Minerva the goddess of wisdom valued intellectual pursuits or women who like the Madonna were pious and dutiful and accepted that their primary role was motherhood This book is the only complete study of the formal education of Irish women and girls Based on extensive research in original sources it presents a fascinating social history of the educational experience of the female gender in Ireland between 1700 and 1920 The book which examines its theme in three major sections covers every aspect of formal and indeed informal schooling and tuition Consequently the reader is introduced to such areas as private education orphanages industrial schools national schools convents intermediate schools and colleges of higher education Section One examines the history of education prior to the intervention of the state Sources include records of private education charity schools and foundations of the early Catholic teaching orders Section Two examines state intervention The introduction of the national school system brought mass literacy to girls of the lower classes but with a gendered curriculum At convent and boarding schools middle class girls received an education suited to their roles in life However in the mid nineteenth century we find the genesis of the concept of academic education for girls Finally Section Three deals with the intellectual liberation of women with particular reference to state support for Intermediate education from 1878 and the campaign for access to higher education for women Formal education brought with it an opening of the professions and facilitated access to a range of paid employment for women Learning Environments for Women's Adult
