

Why Your Dog Barks

Just like humans, dogs have their own way of communicating with other dogs and with us. Barks can have a variety of different meanings and they can reflect whatever complex feeling the dog is feeling in that moment. Here's how you can control the behavior.

Remove the Dogs' Motive

Don't give your dog a reason to bark. Find out what motivates them to bark, and then remove the stimulus. If your dog barks at a passerby from the window, then close the blinds.

Ignore the Barking

Barking can be difficult to ignore, but if your dog sees you unaffected by his barking, then he will give up. Don't look at your dog or speak to him. When he stops barking, reward him with a treat.

Promote Incompatible Behavior

Teach your dog to react to the stimuli with a contrary action, like lying down. If someone is entering your home, then ask your dog to go to his dog bed and sit, then throw him a treat.

Teach Your Dog the "Quiet" Command

To establish this command, you must first teach your dog to speak on command. Once they can reliably bark with your command, teach them a "quiet" command in a calm environment using treats. Praise them for being quiet.
