Understanding Workless People and Communities Helen Ritchie, 2005

Linking Lifetimes Matt Kaplan, Nancy Zimmerman Henkin, Atsuko T. Kusano, 2002 In many developing and post industrialized nations there are powerful demographic and social changes that are endangering the natural ways that old and young have traditionally interacted The current growth in the young and elderly segments of the population of most countries is leading to new challenges in terms of providing health care education financial support and social support systems for the young as well as the elderly An important set of strategies for addressing these trends and the quality of life concerns they generate is the facilitation of intergenerational programs The National Council on the Aging has defined intergenerational programming as activities or programs that increase cooperation interaction or exchange between any two generations In Linking Lifetimes the contributors explore the range of intergenerational programs and policies found across the globe and examine their role in ensuring the transmission of cultural values from generation to generation By illustrating the rich diversity of intergenerational program models the contributors discover how the common goal of promoting intergenerational interaction and understanding unfolds into differential trends social issues and human service systems
