What is epilepsy?

Epilepsy is a long-term condition characterized by recurrent, unprovoked seizures. These are abnormal electrical discharges in the brain that cause changes in behavior, feelings, or consciousness. Seizures can be provoked by a variety of factors, including infections, head trauma, stroke, and genetic factors.

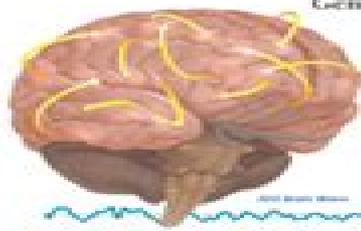

What is an epileptic seizure?

An epileptic seizure is caused by abnormal electrical activity in the brain. This activity is usually brief and does not cause any long-term damage to the brain.

Partial seizures are those that only affect a part of the brain. They can be further divided into simple partial seizures, which do not affect consciousness, and complex partial seizures, which do affect consciousness.

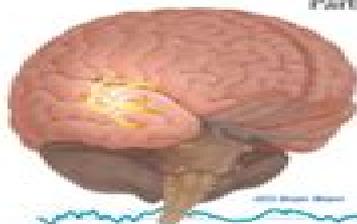

Generalized seizures

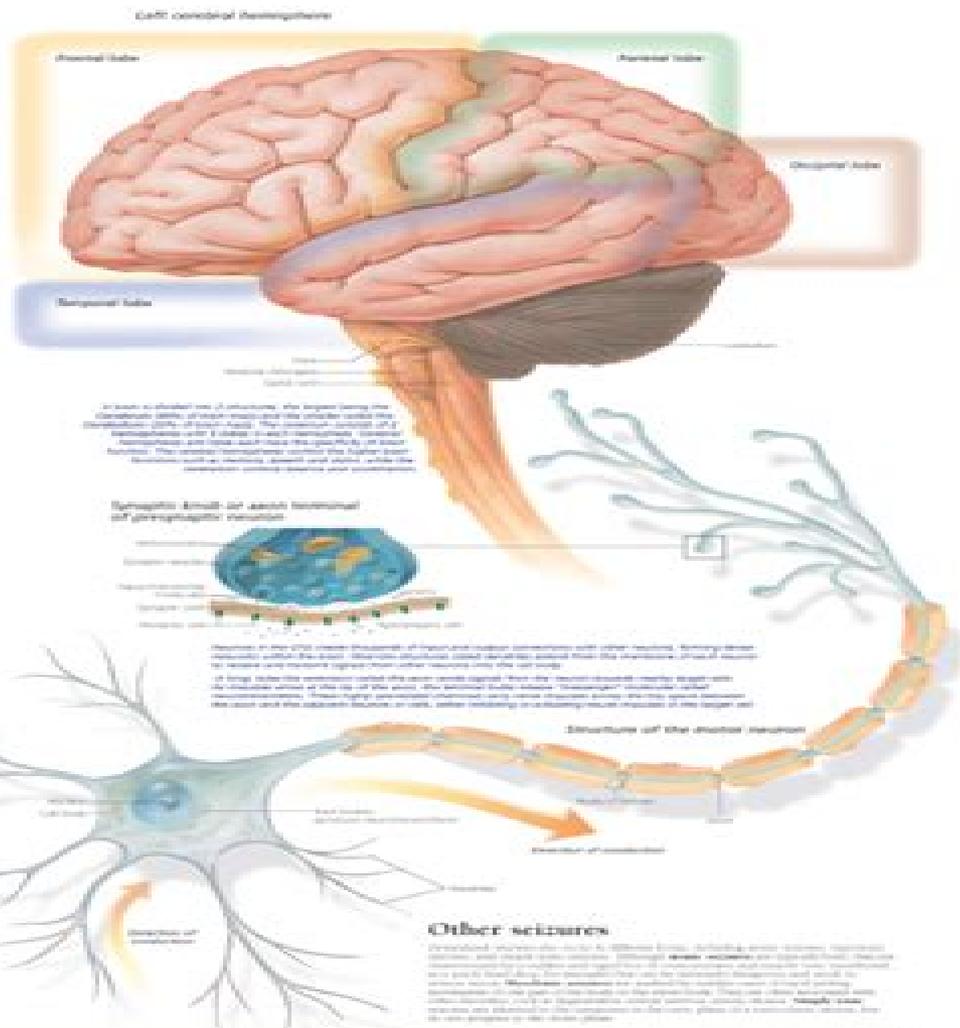

Generalized seizures involve abnormal electrical activity that spreads across the entire brain. They are often characterized by a sudden loss of consciousness and may be accompanied by convulsions. There are several types of generalized seizures, including tonic-clonic, absence, and atypical absence seizures.

Partial (focal) seizures

Partial (focal) seizures involve abnormal electrical activity that is confined to a specific area of the brain. They can be further divided into simple partial seizures, which do not affect consciousness, and complex partial seizures, which do affect consciousness.

Diagnosing and treating epilepsy
The diagnosis of epilepsy is based on a detailed history of the patient's seizures, a physical examination, and an EEG. Treatment options include anti-epileptic drugs, surgery, and dietary changes.

Managing your epilepsy
It is important to take your medication as prescribed and to avoid triggers that can cause seizures. Regular follow-up with your doctor is essential for managing your condition.
