Trade Policy Reforms:

Agricultural Trade Policy Timothy Edward Josling, Tim Josling, 1998 The Uruguay Round trade negotiations marked a historic turning point in the reform of agricultural trade The Uruguay Round Agreement on Agriculture URAA replaced nontariff barriers with bound tariffs curbed export subsidies and codified domestic agricultural programs Unfortunately the URAA bound many of the tariffs that replaced nontariff barriers too high it legitimized export subsidies and it left the domestic farm policies of the major industrial countries largely untouched Fortunately regional trade institutions have also begun to grapple with agricultural trade liberalization Agriculture was featured in the Mercosur agreement in recent agreements between the European Union and the countries of Central and Eastern Europe and in the North American Free Trade Area NAFTA Plans for broad supranational trade structures such as the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation APEC forum and the Free Trade Area of the Americas FTAA have also dealt with the inclusion of agricultural trade Meanwhile in developing and middle income countries unilateral agricultural policy reforms have been part of recent economic policy changes However in the industrial countries agricultural policy reform has languished in the face of much domestic opposition But the reform of the European Union's Common Agricultural Policy CAP in 1992 and the 1996 Farm Bill in the United States seems to have ushered in a new era of relations between government and agricultural groups The author points out ways that multilateral regional and unilateral paths could be coordinated to liberalized agricultural trade He proposes a set of multilateral talks that would benefit from agricultural reform at all levels and complete the job begun at the Uruguay Round

Trade Reform, Efficiency and Growth Ejaz Ghani, 1995

Lessons in Trade Policy Reform Vinod Thomas, K. M. Matin, John Nash, 1990 Trade reform programs have two main objectives The first is to help raise economic growth and employment generation by improving resource allocation and economywide efficiency The second is to help improve the balance of payments by strengthening the competitiveness of the external sector and expanding exports and efficient import substitutes This paper evaluates developing country experience with trade policy reforms and makes recommendations for improving the design and implementation of those reforms It assesses the extent and effectiveness of the reforms under adjustment programs in the 1980s highlighting practical problems and constraints both economic and political Broadly speaking it considers three issues 1 the potential conflicts between trade policy reforms and macroeconomic stabilization efforts 2 the supply response to trade policy reforms in the context of export prospects and domestic and external constraints and 3 the sequencing timing and duration of import reforms their relation to internal reforms and the associated transitional costs The paper finds that trade policy reform when implemented well has contributed to improved economic performance in developing countries The paper also finds that well designed trade policy reforms do not conflict with other priorities except in special cases usually they enhance growth

Best Practices in Trade Policy Reform Vinod Thomas, John Nash, 1991 It was recognized by many developing countries in the 1980s that integration with the global economy is necessary for economic development and technological progress Efforts to liberalize trade were controversial A unique body of evidence on developing country trade liberalization will examine why outcomes have varied from one country to another The political economy of trade liberalization and the interaction among trade and domestic reform macro economic stability and export development is examined using a cross sectional data b country studies c and interviews The sequencing of reforms and implications for multilateral trade negotiations foreign direct investment and regional integration schemes is an additional consideration The emphasis is on practical problems economic and political and recommendations of how policies can be designed and implemented to yield stronger and more sustainable results Trade Policy Reforms in Latin America M. Lengyel, V. Ventura-Dias, 2003-12-19 This volume examines the interaction between private and public institutions in the trade policy making process of eight Latin American countries and trade bargaining in sub regional hemispheric and multilateral fora Faced with expanding trade agendas diversifying negotiation fora and an uncertain global economy each country has found its own niche in regional integration and global insertion providing a wealth of idiosyncratic and convergent policies Foreign Trade Reforms and Development Strategy Jean-Marc Fontaine, 2005-07-27 An effective rebuttal to the orthodox view that developing countries should liberalise their trade policies The contributors consider both the theoretical framework and the empirical evidence Have Trade Policy Reforms Led to Greater Openness in Developing Countries? John Nash, 1999 February 1997 The developing countries that began trading more openly in the 1980s did so incrementally shock therapy was uncommon Asian countries led in trade reform and openness so their export led growth performance was not surprising African countries trailed in reform and have still not become as open as other countries Developing countries experienced a revolution in trade policy in the 1980s and 1990s but it is unclear how much real openness increased After all they had started with multiple often redundant trade restrictions And it is unclear how changes in openness should be measured The most appropriate measure of openness is based on imports of consumer goods argue Andriamananjara and Nash since these imports commonly face the biggest trade barriers After developing several such measures including a measure of the change in tariff equivalent protection they explore the recent evolution of trade policy using readily available trade data Openness has developed incrementally rather than overnight In the early stages of adjustment barriers to imports tended not to be reduced much At first the net reduction of incentives to produce import substitutes was minor especially when currency depreciation is considered Recently import barriers have been reduced more substantially and since there has been little currency depreciation incentives to produce import substitutes have declined Shock therapy was uncommon A few countries moved quickly to eliminate nontariff barriers to imports and to adopt low fairly uniform tariffs But most countries tended to peel away redundant layers of trade barriers one at a time They usually began with the barriers embodied in rationing and exchange controls proceeded to nontariff measures and finally reduced tariffs Each step may have reduced protection a bit but the big reductions apparently came only in later stages Still even gradual reform helped open up those economies The Asian countries tended to be most open both early and late They were also above average in reform efforts by some measures so their strong growth performance based on exports was unsurprising The African countries whose trade policies were probably worst to begin with made relatively modest progress initially In recent years their progress has been substantial whether they have improved as much as other countries depends on which measure is used Countries tied to the French franc for whom real devaluation was more difficult showed less progress than nonfranc countries illustrating the importance of the connection between devaluation and trade reform There is no evidence that rapid trade reform resulted in Africa s de industrialization This paper a product of the International Trade Division International Economics Department is part of a larger effort in the Department to evaluate the effects of structural adjustment with special focus on African economies Trade Policy Reforms Under Adjustment Programs World Bank. Operations Evaluation Department,1992 This review of the Bank s experience in support of trade policy reform in a selected group of countries is the first study by the World Bank s Operations Evaluation Department to concentrate exclusively on the Bank s operations and related issues in adjustment lending for trade policy reform The impetus for the study was twofold the increasing importance trade policy had acquired in the Bank s structural and sectoral adjustment lending over the years and the view that the Bank had enough experience in this policy area to provide useful lessons for future lending While the benefits of trade policy adjustment are gaining wider recognition several concerns persist regarding the policy design and impact of those programs in the adjusting countries The study addresses these issues in the context of individual country experience with trade reforms in the 1980s Detailed case studies were prepared for these countries taking into account the initial conditions prevailing in the country the design and implementation of the programs their impact and their sustainability The study assesses whether trade policy reforms were complemented by other measures including macroeconomic industrial and financial policies and whether the Bank considered these links in designing trade policy programs The main goal is to draw lessons from the cross section of past experience for suggesting improvements in the Bank s approach to productivity enhancing adjustment programs Trade Policy Reforms and Development S. K. Jayasuriya,2005-01-01 The two volumes incorporate major new papers contributed by leading international economists on a range of topics that reflect the breadth of Professor Lloyd s own distinguished contributions to the field of international trade and policy during a career spanning over four decades The Politics of Major Policy Reform in Postwar America Jeffery A. Jenkins,Sidney M. Milkis,2014-11-10 This book examines nine critical issues in the politics of major programmatic reforms in post World War II America Industrial and Trade Policy Reform in Developing Countries Ramesh Adhikari,Colin H. Kirkpatrick,John Weiss,1992 The Theory of Trade Policy Reform Carsten Kowalczyk,2001 This book presents an authoritative collection of the most important papers previously published by leading scholars in the field of trade policy and its reform Included are sections on early contributions to the theory of reform world welfare and trade reform and reform
