Beginnings Benbo Smith, 2016-05-31 Justice Equality Join Benbo Smith as he takes a stand for what's right. Poetry can be a platform for social change. With his distinct voice, poet Benbo Smith tackles unjust societal structures in a series of allegories on politics, economics, discrimination, and other ailments of the modern era. Using the special art form of prose poetry, Smith's distinct voice can carry you to deeper thinking through his latest collection of 12 poems. In his stand against the evils of the past and present, Smith's message is clear: the world will only succeed if all peoples are regarded equal. Beginnings: Selected Verse sets up Smith as a poet to watch in the coming decade. Port Scholar Chronicles Stanley Scott Jr., 2025-12-08 Look, sometimes I wonder: am I supposed to be here? In this classroom, with these textbooks, writing a memoir. Dudes like me, we fix things we don't write about; fixing things. We work, we survive, we provide. But somewhere between a wrench and a research paper, between a chassis and a thesis statement, I found the answer and became something nobody expected. Not even me. This ain't no rags to riches story. I still got the rags, just added some knowledge to them. Every morning at 5:30, that alarm goes off, and I make a choice: stay comfortable or stay building. By 7 AM, I'm working on machinery that costs more than houses; inspection logs in one hand, coffee in the other. By 5 PM, I'm sitting in a classroom at San Francisco State, grease still under my fingernails, trying to keep my eyes open while we discuss Social Determinants of Health. The thing is, I LIVE those determinants. Born in San Francisco, working in Oakland, studying back in The City That Bay Bridge That's my office hallway 4 times a week, 8 from the O to the Sco. That's 16 in toll each week, just to exist between two worlds that weren't supposed to meet. But here's what they don't tell you about transformation: it don't happen overnight, and it definitely don't happen dirty. March 2011, I got clean. Fourteen years later, I'm still cleaning up just different messes now. Instead of dealers, I'm dealing with professors. Instead of running from cops, I'm running to catch the 5 PM class after a nine-hour shift. This memoir, This is for every mechanic with a dream bigger than an engine, for every addict who thought recovery was the end goal, not knowing it was just the beginning. For every working man who been told that's not for people like us. For my mom who never stopped believing. For my father's memory. For my sister who sees who I'm becoming, not just who I was. 21 units left till graduation. Five courses between me and a degree, nobody thought I'd get. But I'm still here, still grinding, still proving that impossible is just an opinion from people who gave up too early. Welcome to my world. Where diagnostic codes meet ZIP codes, where working class meets academic class, where recovery meets discovery. This is the Port Scholar Chronicles.
