S. Government Accountability Office (,2013-06 GAO discussed management problems at the Agency for International Development AID and whether it is adequately meeting its foreign economic assistance responsibilities GAO found that 1 the AID management approach and organizational capacity have not kept up with the increasingly diffuse scope of the foreign assistance program and the expanding number of countries in which AID operates 2 AID has expanded its operations 3 some small AID programs have had such a negligible effect on a country s development that the effect may not justify AID in country presence 4 studies have shown that AID has not effectively managed and has not been held accountable for achieving results from a diffuse foreign assistance program 5 opening new overseas offices has further burdened the AID operating expense budget 6 the fragmentation of the foreign assistance program is largely due to a lack of consensus among the many groups that are concerned with the AID mission or have a stake in its services and resources 7 congressional involvement has hampered AID ability to use foreign aid as leverage to secure needed economic reforms and target assistance to the most pressing development needs of recipient countries 8 AID has not been able to fully implement the strategic management concepts that would enable it to better focus and concentrate its limited resources 9 AID maintains that its decentralized organizational structure and management approach are appropriate given the widely varying development and assistance needs of the numerous countries in which it operates and 10 lack of management controls has impaired AID program effectiveness Development Policies and Strategies Papua New Guinea,1990
