Wage Differentials:

Wage differentials between the public and private sectors in India Elena E. Glinskaya, Michael Lokshin, 2005 The authors use 1993-94 and 1999-2000 India Employment and Unemployment surveys to investigate wage differentials between the public and private sectors as well as workers' decisions to join a particular sector To obtain robust estimates of the wage differential they apply three econometric techniques each relying on a different set of assumptions about the process of job selection All three methods show that differences in wages between public sector workers and workers in the formal private and informal casual sectors are positive and high Estimates show that on average the public sector premium ranges between 62 percent and 102 percent over the private formal sector and between 164 percent and 259 percent over the informal casual sector depending on the choice of methodology

Labor Market

Information and Wage Differentials by Race and Sex David Neumark, 1998 This paper attempts to test whether information problems in labor markets can explain why minority or female workers are sometimes paid less than equally qualified white male workers In particular the relationship between starting wages current performance and race and sex is studied OLS regressions of starting wages on current performance which is measured some time after the beginning of employment indicate that minority workers are paid lower starting wages than white workers with the same eventual performance among both men and women This may reflect taste discrimination However if employers base starting wages on expected productivity or performance and average performance is lower for minority workers as it is in these data then these estimated differentials could reflect simple statistical discrimination A test of statistical versus taste discrimination and a test of statistical discrimination versus pure measurement error provide some evidence for both men and women that statistical discrimination is partly to blame for these differences in starting wages between minority and white workers although the evidence is not very strong statistically Average performance of women is if anything higher than that of men so simple statistical discrimination cannot explain the lower starting wages that women receive However more complex models of statistical discrimination suggest that worse labor market information about a particular group can generate lower wages for that group A test of the quality of labor market information suggests that employers have better information about male workers which may explain the lower starting wages paid to women Together this evidence suggests that better labor market information might boost starting wages of minorities and women
