

Where does rain come from?

Water is constantly moving between the land, rivers, air, and the ocean in something called the water cycle. The sun's heat drives the water cycle. It makes water from the oceans rise into the air and eventually fall as rain.

2. Condensation
As it rises, water vapor starts to cool and begins to turn back into tiny water droplets and make clouds. This is called condensation.

1. Evaporation
When the sun heats up the water, it starts to evaporate. This means it changes from a liquid to a gas. The gas is called water vapor.

3. Precipitation
Rain, snow, or hail fall from the clouds when the tiny droplets get heavier than the air around them. This is called precipitation.

4. Runoff
Rainwater trickles into streams that flow into rivers, which then carry the rain toward the sea.

5. Back to the sea
The water returns to the sea, or is collected in lakes, where the sun heats it and the whole cycle begins again.
