1950s as an infant Leilani Holmes spent much of her early life in settings that offered no clues about her Hawaiian past images of which continued to haunt her even as she completed a master's thesis on Hawaiian music and identity in southern California. Ancestry of Experience documents Holmes' quest to reclaim and understand her own origin story. Holmes writes in two different and at times incongruent voices: one describing the search for her genealogy, the other critiquing Western epistemologies she encounters along the way. In the course of her journey, she finds that Hawaiian oral tradition links identity to the land (aina) through ancestry, while traditional scholarly theories of knowing, particularly political economy and the discourse of the invention of tradition, textually obliterate land and ancestry. In interviews with kupuna, Holmes learns of the connectedness of spirituality and aina through her study and practice of hula kahiko. Comes an understanding of ancient hula as a conversation between aina and the dancer's body that has the power to activate historical memory. Holmes' experience has special relevance for indigenous adoptees and indigenous scholars. Both are distanced from the knowledge agendas and strategies of their communities and are tasked to speak in languages ill-suited to the telling of their own stories and those of their ancestors. In addition to those with an interest in Hawaiian knowledge and culture, Ancestry of Experience will appeal to readers of memoirs of identity, academic and personal accounts of racial identity formation, and works of indigenous epistemologies. A website www.ancestryofexperience.com will include supplementary material.

Domesticating Brown

Christopher B. Patterson, 2026-02-20. In Domesticating Brown, Christopher B. Patterson traces how racial imaginings of brownness have shifted across transpacific histories and contemporary empires, acting as both a form of containment and a site where marginalized peoples can reshape its racial logics through art, story, and embodied difference. Conversational Storytelling Among Japanese Women, Mariko Karatsu, 2012. This book presents research findings on the overall process of storytelling as a social event in Japanese everyday conversations, focusing on the relationship between a story and surrounding talks, the social and cultural aspects of the participants, and the tellability of conversational stories. Focusing on the participants' verbal and nonverbal behavior and their use of linguistic devices, the chapters describe how the participants display their orientation to the: a) embeddedness of the story in the conversation; b) their views of past events; c) their knowledge about the story content and elements; and d) their social circumstances, and how these four elements are relevant for a story becoming worth telling and sharing. The book furthers the sociolinguistic analysis of conversational storytelling by describing how the participants' concerns about social circumstances, as members of a particular community, specifically their role relationships and interpersonal relationships with others, influence the shape of their storytelling.
