Women Work And Divorce:

Women, Work, and Divorce Richard R. Peterson, 1989-03-09 This book considers how women cope with the economic hardship which accompanies divorce using national longitudinal data on a generation of women in the United States These women came of age at a time when they were expected to give priority to family roles over work roles Yet by the time many of them were divorced in the 1970s with the climate of changing perceptions of gender roles women were expected to work and were unprepared for the economic disruption caused by divorce Peterson analyzes the experiences of women drawing upon sociological and economic approaches to the study of labor market outcomes and of life cycle events He shows how over the long term most divorced women can make at least a partial recovery but divorced women with children have a more difficult time making work adjustments and experience greater economic deprivation Given the continuing high rates of divorce Peterson's findings highlight the importance of work rather than marriage for women's economic security

Changes in Marriage and Divorce as Drivers of Employment and Retirement of Older Women Claudia Olivetti, Dana E. Rotz, 2016 Abstract We study associations among women's current marital status past marital history and later life labor force participation We first document these relationships using data from the 1986 to 2008 waves of the Survey of Income and Program Participation SIPP We then exploit variation in laws governing divorce across states and over time to quasi experimentally identify how the timing of an exogenous increase in divorce risk that is the introduction of unilateral divorce impacts employment and retirement outcomes for older women The spread of unilateral divorce we find was associated with cross cohort differences in the probability of divorce over the lifecycle For women with a low risk of divorce later exposure to unilateral divorce significantly increases the probability of full time employment later in life and significantly decreases retirement wealth This finding suggests that ever divorced women are working longer remedially when a woman unexpectedly divorces later in life she is less likely to have engaged in precautionary human capital investment and might have to work longer to increase her assets prior to retirement For women with a high risk of divorce later exposure to increases in divorce risk does not impact full time employment after age 50 but is positively associated with investment in education post marriage These women invest more in their own human capital within marriage which might insure them against increases in exogenous divorce risk at later ages

Marriage, Divorce and the Work and Earning Careers of Spouses Lee A. Lillard, Linda Waite, 2009 Social Security benefits depend on the employment and earnings history of the covered worker but especially for women they depend on one's marital history and the employment and earnings history of one's spouse This paper examines the interrelationship between marriage divorce employment and earnings of men and women Since getting married or getting divorced tends to affect women's employment choices differently than men's we consider the sexes separately We estimate 1 the impact of earnings work hours and wages while unmarried on the likelihood of re marriage 2 the effect of these measures of career success while married on the likelihood of divorce 3 the effect of being married on men's and women's propensity to participate in the labor force and conditional on participation the effect of being married on earnings wages and annual hours of work for all these labor market outcomes we also assess the impact of the length of the marriage Together these results show a pattern of gender specialization in marriage with men moving toward and women moving away from more intensive and extensive employment and the financial gain it brings Success in the labor market while single increases the likelihood of marriage for men and decreases it for women More work and greater financial rewards from work tend to stabilize marriage for men and destabilize marriage for women Our results also show substantial change in the relationship between marital and employment careers for those born after WWII but only for women The employment careers of younger women are much less responsive to marriage than were those of their mothers or older sisters The Role of Work Identity in Women's Adjustment to Divorce Gina Michele Bisagni,1993 Personal

Relationships Across Cultures Robin Goodwin,2013-05-13 Is falling in love the same the world over What makes a happy marriage in different cultures How does our society influence us in the way we raise our children Is modern life incompatible with intimacy In this innovative new text Robin Goodwin challenges many of the established views on relationships by considering how different cultures view different relationships love marriage friendship the family sexual relations By discussing fundamental differences in values between cultures alongside other key influences such as social class and education he explores why these differences occur and how different political and historical events have challenged existing patterns of relationships Finally drawing on research from all parts of the world he considers how we can use this knowledge to help different communities across the globe cope with their most pressing relational challenges Dr Robin Goodwin is Reader in Psychology in the Department of Human Sciences at Brunel University London He publishes widely on relationships and culture and lectures about his work across the world Women Working Together ,1982 Adolescent

Nock, 1999 Though married women have steadily increased their labor force activity most continue to do the bulk of the housework However due to increases in life expectancy and declines in fertility homemaking is no longer a lifetime career for women as a group Without a wife who specializes in homemaking married couples must balance the responsibilities for such tasks in new ways In recent years husbands have assumed greater responsibility for routine housework This research investigates the consequences of husbands involvement in women's tasks and wives involvement in men's tasks for the stability of their marriages We show that women's work endangers marriages regardless of which spouse does it Greater involvement in traditionally female housework by either partner is associated with higher chances of divorce or separation However the consequences of the time that husbands and wives spend in various tasks is strongly conditioned by perceptions of fairness A History of the Family as a Social and Educational Institution Willystine Goodsell, 1915 Women and Economic Evolution Theresa Schmid McMahon, 1912 Readings in Contemporary Problems in the United States Horace Taylor, Joseph Daniel McGoldrick, 1930 Gift of Rabbi W Gunther Plaut The Solicitors' Journal and Weekly Reporter, 1918
