

Why is writing across the curriculum important?

1. "Written output is a great way to assess student knowledge.
2. Writing is the essential skill students need as they enter adult life.
3. Helping students learn to express themselves with confidence in all subject areas can contribute to improvements in behavior and self-esteem.
4. Students who write clearly, think clearly. And students who think clearly have a better chance of navigating their way through the obstacles of adolescence.
5. Writing is power"

(Peha, p. 4).

- John Dewey (1910) argued that separating and isolating content areas in the school curriculum was arbitrary and blurred the natural relationships content areas have with each other (Bintz & Monobe, 2018).
