

SENSORY ADAPTATION

Sensory adaptation is a phenomenon in which the body adjusts to external stimuli over time, becoming less sensitive or responsive to that particular stimulus.

EXPLANATION

According to Harris (2007), "...sensory adaptation occurs when sensory receptors reduce their responsiveness to a stimulus after repeated or continuous exposure" (p. 41).

This form of adaptation is found in all five senses and can occur both on a conscious and subconscious level.

EXAMPLES

- Taste: Through prolonged exposure, certain tastes can become blander as our taste buds adapt over time.
- Smell: If exposed to a pungent odor for an extended time, the sense of smell gradually becomes less sensitive and eventually reduces the detection of the scent.
